Ryan Wengel, VP of Marketing Geronimo Hospitality Group 525 3rd St. #100
Beloit, WI 53511

January 23, 2023

Dear Mr. Wengel,

Based on your numerous awards, the Geronimo Hospitality group has a solid reputation in the hospitality industry. Moreover, you've created a memorable customer experience at all your locations; I read their comments in different websites, which is always my goal as a graphic designer. I'm ready to use my 4 years of design and management experience to help you continue to attract the best customers and generate more revenue.

Partnership was the key while I was the leader graphic design specialist at Book Bush Press. Primarily, I worked with the marketing and editorial teams to design illustrations and cover art. Throughout development, I reviewed illustrations from junior designers and approved them with the authors and applicable external teams. I reviewed each illustration according to design principles, quality standards, and client expectations. Because of my meticulous review process with the relevant parties, 100 percent of designs were approved, and 87 percent of projects were delivered before the deadline.

Currently, as the marketing and graphic design specialist at George Mason University, I design print and electronic marketing products to boost brand awareness and engagement. However, I recognized a need for more personal content, so I turned to photography and videography. My "Life at George Mason University" video series had a 3-percent conversion rate, and by the end of 2021, I had more than doubled our followers on Instagram and Twitter, resulting in an 11- percent rise in prospective student applications.

Graphic design is nothing without a strong vision to improve the customer experience. I am motivated by modern designs that are practical and innovative but also functional and fun, and I know that Geronimo Hospitality Group would be the ideal place for me to grow as a designer and leader. Thank you for reviewing my portfolio; which includes my CV, certificates, and significant documents. I'm eager to discuss how we might push the limits of hospitality together to create a better and unforgettable customer experience at all your locations.

Sincerely,

Marguerite Justine

READING 3 (Items 46-55)(10 marks)Read the text. Then complete the task.*

Concerns about the rate of greenhouse gas emissions necessitate the shift to more sustainable fuels. Algae-derived jet fuels have been suggested as possible solutions to the problem.

The aviation industry is one of the heaviest sources of pollution in the world. Statistics indicate that for every fifty units of greenhouse gas generated on the earth, one unit will come from the aviation sector. This number may increase to 1.5 units in the next half century. Consequently, sustainable and effective ways of dealing with this high carbon footprint are necessary. Numerous scientists have already responded to this need through a variety of innovations. Some of them have suggested the use of biodiesel, but its propensity to solidify in cold conditions makes it untenable. Others have suggested the use of FT SPK, which involves the use of solid biomass to generate oil through a process known as pyrolysis. The major problem with this approach is that it is quite resource consuming. Firms also have the option of using oil from algae in order to create synthetic kerosene through the process of hydroprocessing. Algae-derived fuels have gained popularity in the late 2000s. However, much research on them started in the 1990s. During the year 2008, several aviation stakeholders such as the Boeing, Virgin Atlantic, and Air New Zealand formed the Algal Biomass Organization. In January 2009, Continental Airlines tested the first commercial jet using a blend of algae-derived fuels.

At the time, a 50-50 combination of conventional fuel and algae biofuel was used. In July 2010, the first plane to be powered by 100% algae-derived biofuel was flown by Airbus maker EADS. It was found that the fuel was more efficient than the conventional ones. About fifty percent less fuel was needed compared to a petroleum-derived fuel. Even the unwanted emissions were extremely reduced. In September 2010, Exelon Corporation worked on a new method of algae production that could be sustained even during cold temperatures. During the first month of October in 2011, an organization known as Pond Biofuels Inc. found a way of growing algae from cement plant emissions. However, the quantities were still minimal in number. In the first month of 2012, an organization known as VG Energy discovered a new method of producing algae that could increase the amount of oil that it produces by 700%.

Algae-derived jet fuels are quite promising because they provide an answer to most of the problems created by other biomass-derived products. Not only are there no threats to food security or land resources from algae, but it easily blends with conventional fuels consequently eliminating the need to change aircraft parts before use.
