PART 8

Junior MasterChef

Can you cook? Do your family and friends think your food is amazing? How about entering a cooking competition? There are a lot of TV cooking competitions for children these days, and they are becoming very popular.

In Australia, the cooking competition Junior MasterChef first appeared on TV screens in 2010. About 5,000 children entered! The show was very popular and attracted a lot of children in 2011, too. But the level of the competition was very high, and there were 50 children in the second series.

The children did a lot of different things in the 21 episodes. In one episode, they invented their own meals with two key ingredients, and in another they worked in a high school snack store for a day. They also discovered how to use ingredients like fresh herbs in their cooking, and learned how to prepare some very complicated meals.

The winner of the second series was 11-year-old Greta Yaxley. She entered the show without any hopes of winning – she simply enjoyed cooking. But each week, her excellent meals won a lot of points, and it didn't take long for the judges to see her special talent.

In the final episode of the series, Greta's first test was to prepare a dessert with only a little time. There were a few mistakes, but the result was delicious. Her second test, a seafood dish, also had a few problems, but at the end the judges thought it tasted great.

Greta's prize was AU$15,000. There was a lot of praise from the judges, too. She was very surprised and very happy. "I want to continue with food," she said. "I want to show the whole world that I love food, and that I can cook it."
