At first, she landed a job with Disney World, then, 3) [redacted] as a stand-up comedian for a while, and eventually had her employment with a steady pay check selling fax machines for the next seven years. But it wasn't until she had her "Eureka" moment, that she found her life's work.

One day Sara was getting ready for a party and realized she didn't have any underwear that would give her a smooth silhouette under her white pants. So, as a temporary fix, she cut the feet off a pair of her panty hose. She immediately saw a new product opportunity in it and decided to create a line of shapewear.

Sara would spend the next two years trying to 4) [redacted] of the industry. She knew she was onto something big, so she 5) [redacted] to get her product out there. After tons of hustle, late-nights, and 6) [redacted] persistence, she eventually found a fabric factory that would work with her. In 2000, Blakely finally persuaded a North Carolina-based mill to produce her product. Her company, Spanx, was born and soon became a huge success.

Since then, Spanx has gone 7) [redacted]. By 2012, Blakely had become the youngest self-made female billionaire in history. Despite her incredible wealth, Blakely remains remarkably grounded. She still lives in the same apartment she bought when she first set up her business and saves all her old clothes for a rainy day. She's a true inspiration to anyone who wants to achieve their dreams and a shining example of what can happen if you leave 8) [redacted].
