

DOGNAPPING

1. Last Friday, James Cosens was walking his five-month-old puppy, Rosie, close to his home in Wales. While Rosie was running around, she ran close to two men. One of them picked her up and said to James, "I am taking your dog. If you try to take her back, I will stab you". What the criminals didn't know was that James used to be an amateur boxer. Not seeing any weapons on the men, James used his skills to fight them off and successfully got Rosie back.
2. Less lucky was Ryan Fischer, a dog walker in Los Angeles. While he was walking three French bulldogs: Koji, Gustav, and Miss Asia, two men attacked him. Mr. Fischer tried to defend himself, but he was shot in the struggle. The two men took the bulldogs, but Miss Asia managed to escape. The dogs belonged to actress and singer, Lady Gaga who offered a no-questions-asked $500,000 reward for their safe return. The dogs were eventually given back, and Mr. Fischer survived, but not before spending time recovering in the hospital.
3. So why the attacks on people walking dogs? During the pandemic, there has been a large increase in the number of people buying dogs. Due to the demand, prices have gone up: a puppy which used to cost $700 can now be sold for four times that amount. Greater profits have attracted criminals, with animal thefts rising by 250% in the UK. Criminals have even been impersonating charity officials to get to the dogs. Dr. Jane Tyson from the RSPCA, a British animal charity, described this method as "shocking" but added that real officers will "always wear an identity badge and a branded uniform".
4. In the UK, the government is discussing making "dognapping" a more serious offense. At present, the maximum jail time for this crime is seven years. This, however, may well increase. One strong argument for an increase is the amount of emotional damage created by the loss of a beloved dog. To many people, dogs are members of the family. The discussion over penalties for this crime continues, but in the meantime, Dr. Jane Tyson offers some advice. Most dog thefts are from gardens, so do not leave them unattended there. It's also important to not leave them alone outside shops or in cars.
