Clouds usually spell bad news for pedestrians. But for a group of visitors in Boston a few months ago, a shower disclosed a secret poem stencilled in waterproof paint on a sidewalk and revealed by the rain as if by magic. “Raining Poetry” turned out to be a 2.1. (FRUIT) _____ collaboration between City Hall and the nonprofit Mass Poetry Society. The project is gradually bringing art to the streets and is 2.2. (DENY) _____ a diversion for people walking in the rain. Members of the Mayor’s Mural Crew, a city-sponsored youth group set up to create public art, have been inscribing the poems in batches since April. Crew members first spray their creations with great 2.3. (ACCURATE) _____, and then test them out by splashing water on the sidewalk. Currently, there are poems hidden in various parts of the city. Organizers believe that the poems will have a 2.4. (SUBSTANCE) _____ impact on people in the city and that is why they plan to keep adding more, and in more languages. Their hope is that, in the next two years, everyone in the city will encounter a poem on a sidewalk at least once or twice a month. So next time it rains in Boston, make sure to look down. You might see a poem 2.5. (CHEER) _____ beaming up at you.
