Last summer I stayed in London with a good friend of mine for a few weeks. I had just split up with my boyfriend. I was feeling a bit depressed because of that. (1)____

One day my friend, who was also single, suggested going to a speed dating event in one of the clubs nearby. 'Why not?' I said. I decided not to wear any smart clothes, just jeans and a sports top. My friend took the matter more seriously, though. She'd spent over an hour dressing up before we left.

When we arrived at the club, most of the people were already there. (2)____ The women would be seated at the tables while the men would move from one table to another, chatting to each of the women for four minutes. A bell would ring to signal the end of each quick date.

It was a funny and interesting experience. Two of the guys seemed to think they were making a huge impression on the girls. What arrogance! Another one was too shy to make a sensible conversation. However, I found three of my dates quite interesting. (3)____ After the event I learnt that that these guys had also put my name on their lists. I got their email addresses so that we could arrange a time and place for a real date. It wasn't going to be such a bad summer after all ...

- A I ticked their names on my list.
- B I wasn't keen on going there with her at first.
- C I felt I needed a break from it all.
- D The organisers quickly explained the rules.
- E There was no chance I'd like to meet them for a real date.
