Internet Art

Internet art is a form / format of digital artwork distributed via the Internet. This form of art has circumvented the traditional / traditionalistic dominance of the gallery and museum system, delivering aesthetic / beautiful experiences via the Internet. In many cases, the viewer is drawn into some kind of interaction / interactivity with the work of art. Artists working in this manner are sometimes referred to as net artists.

Internet art can happen outside the technological / technical structure of the Internet, such as when artists use specific social or cultural Internet traditions in a project outside it. Internet art is often but not always interactive, participating / participatory, and multimedia-based. Internet art can be used to spread / spreading a message, either political or social, using human / humid interactions.

The term Internet art typically does not refer to art that has been simply / simplify digitized and uploaded to be viewable over the Internet. This can be done through a web browser, such as images of paintings uploading / uploaded for viewing in an online gallery. Rather, this genre relies intrinsically on the Internet to exist / existing, taking advantage of such aspects as an interactive interface and connectivity to multiple social and economic cultures and micro-cultures. It refers to the Internet as a wholeness / whole, not only to web-based works.

Internet art can be created in a variety of media: through websites; e-mail projects; Internet-based original software projects (sometimes involving gaming / games); Internet-linked networked installations; interactive and/or streaming video, audio, or radio works; and networked performances (using multi-user domains, virtual / real worlds such as Second Life, chat rooms, and other networked environments).
