Read the conversations out loud . Put in on or in.

- Just present your case. No theatrics. Just the facts.
- Oh, I'm gonna fact her brains out. I have a whole presentation I've been working .

- What did you see?
- I saw a man love... who seems tortured.

- I want my lube back.
- But we have a contract.
- What's there? Is it a monkey?

- What is going ?
- You seem to have mistaken once again a closed door as an invitation to enter this house.
- Why was it closed?
- Well, we'd have to go back time to the invention of structures with doors around 800 B.C. Something about avoiding plague.

- Let's see what we have. Smells delicious. Ooh, we have... the oatmeal with fresh fruit the side, and brown sugar the side, and milk the side, and cream the side. We also have a fan favorite, the South-by-Southwest scramble with bacon.
- Mm. OK.
- Wait a second. Have you found your nut compartment?
- Excuse me?
- The nut compartment. Right here your fridge is your nut compartment, where your assorted nuts are kept at a nut-friendly 45 degrees.
- Uh, uh, Kyle? I'm sort of paying for my friend's services by the hour, so can we just kind of wrap it up?

- This is your contract for the lube.
- Yes, yes. And where is the loophole?
- What loophole?
- The loophole you put it case things went south and I ever had to get my lube back.

- Shake it off! What's our plan?
- Well, our plan is very simple: There's language in section six, paragraph J, clause B, on which a case can be made that the reversion of rights--
- Cut to the chase, Sol.
- There's a loophole.

Read the conversations out loud . Put in into.

- I've got to take my lube back from her. It cannot go out the world with palm oil in it. It just can't.

- I am not embarrassed about any of this. I walk places all the time like this. And I leave like this, too. Not embarrassed!

- Thinking you might say that, I did a little more research, and I found the undeniable genius... of coconut oil.
- Uh, we looked coconut oil. At length. But palm oil has it beat:
  - Mm-hmm. It doesn't require hydrogenation.
  - it comes with its own antioxidants.
  - It inhibits cancer growth.
  - It has amazing mouthfeel.
  - And it doesn't affect taste or smell.
- Coconut oil does.

- Yeah. If you want to stop at Del Taco on your way home tomorrow and get me a Veggie Works Burrito,I wouldn't punch you the face. Well, I'd hope you wouldn't punch me the face either way.

Read the conversations out loud.

- I would've brought one for everybody but it took me three years to knit. Plus, I thought it would be just the two of us this morning.

- What happened?
- Elaine ran out of the house, and the dog ran after her. They can't find either of them.

Read the conversations out loud . Put in past or through.

- Is he a new friend?
- He's a none-of-your-business friend.
- You think I don't know what goes on at that dog park?
- Have you been stalking me?
- No!
- Then how did you know I was at the dog park?
- Because I was driving the dog park en route to driving this house, which I do on a regular basis because of traffic.

- I guess barging in closed doors is a family tradition.

- Oh, I have a-an audio/visual experience prepared.
- And I think we can maybe just talk your experience with words.
- OK.
- The word is yeast. I've done some research

Match the words with the definitions.

	To endure severe physical or mental pain, suffering, or anguish inflicted deliberately by others, often as a form of punishment.
stalking	To get to the main point or most important part of something without wasting time on unnecessary details.
to talk through	A widespread and serious disease that affects many people, animals, or areas at the same time.
to knit	To create fabric by interlocking, typically in a series of connected loops.
to punch in one's face	The act of persistently following or harassing someone, often secretly and with harmful intentions.
to cut to the chase	A payment arrangement where compensation is based on the number of hours worked, rather than a fixed salary or other method.
a language	The specific terminology, jargon, or specialized vocabulary used in legal documents, contracts, or proceedings.
to pay by the hour	A physical assault where someone forcefully strikes another person in the face with their closed fist.
plague	A gap or flaw in a law, rule, or system that allows someone to evade or bypass certain requirements or restrictions.
a loophole	To explain or discuss something in detail, typically to guide someone through a process or problem.
to be tortured
