Gardeners and florists are the happiest workers

florist

A new survey puts gardeners and florists at number one in the happiness league. But what makes them so happy? Nine out of ten gardeners and florists say they are happy in their jobs. That compares with four out of ten office workers. We asked them why.

'I love my job! I spend all day in the open air, all year round, seven days a week! I love watching the plants grow and change from spring to summer to autumn.'
Dave, gardener, Brighton

Being in contact with nature and working outdoors are two very important things for gardeners. Florists' jobs are a little different. They don't work outdoors, they don't grow the flowers, but they are just as happy!

'I have a small flower shop in the town centre. I work five days a week and sometimes at weekends. I love every minute. I love flowers and I really like helping people decorate a hotel or a restaurant or a special place for a special occasion.'
Chloe, florist, Edinburgh

So, if you want to be happy at work, get a job as a gardener or a florist!
