

Sofia, filled with excitement, arrived at Paris airport looking forward to starting her long-awaited vacation. Everything was perfect until she reached the baggage carousel and couldn't find her suitcase. With a sense of worry growing, she headed to the lost luggage counter. There, she explained in English, with a nervous accent: "Excuse me, I can't find my luggage." The person behind the counter asked for her luggage tag and checked their system. After moments that seemed eternal, they informed her that her suitcase had been mistakenly sent on another flight but that they would do everything possible to recover it quickly.

Sofia filled out a form with her details and the staff assured her they would contact her as soon as they had news about her luggage. As she left the airport, she felt a mix of frustration and defiance. She decided not to let this setback ruin her experience. She bought essentials at a nearby store and set out to explore Paris.

The next day, while having coffee in a quaint café, her phone rang. It was the airport informing her that her suitcase had been found and would be sent directly to her hotel. Sofia sighed in relief and smiled. Despite the turbulent start, her adventurous spirit and ability to handle unexpected situations in a foreign language made her feel more confident and ready to enjoy the rest of her trip.

According to the story answer these questions:

1 What did Sofia discover at the baggage carousel? 4 How did Sofia feel after she left the airport?

2 Could Sofia explain herself well in English? 5 What was Sofia doing when the phone rang?

3 Where did they send Sofia's suitcase by mistake? 6 Did Sofia return to her country after the inconvenience?