1. Steve, CEO at AllianceTech, is talking about a rumor heard about the marketing team, coordinated by Tina. Match the business idioms with the gaps in the dialogue below:

-Jack of all trades	-Cut to the chase	-Call it a day	- Get the big picture
- Slacking off	-Throw in the towel	- Give you a heads up	-24/7
-Under the table	-A lot on your plate	- Win-win

Tina: Alright! We should stop with small talks and _____. Time's running out!

Steve: Of course! I heard from the design team that half of the marketing team was _____, doing their job poorly. That's a shame!

Tina: That's a very rude thing to say, Steve! That's not true. They've been working _____ to make this project happen and I think they're doing a very good job.

Steve: It's taking a while to get this work done! But I must admit that you guys have _____ to work right now. Should I do something to help you?

Tina: But you're not getting _____, Steve. It's a whole new app and they had only a week to get all the promotional content done!

Steve: Alright, I _____, you're right. Maybe I could call Janice, our marketing partner at PTI to support you guys and postpone the deadline for next week. Can we do it?

Tina: Yes, definitely! Janice is a _____, especially when it comes to time related issues.

Steve: I've been thinking about working with the Microns marketing direction, but I heard rumors about corruption happening _____ at this company. It wouldn't be good for us to do business with them.

Tina: Microns and PTI are competing for our deal, so we should be careful about anything related to cutting ties with Microns. But that would be definitely a _____ for us.

Steve: That's how I think. Well, I'll _____ about any news related to this situation, and connect the team and Janice until Thursday.

Tina: Alright, Steve! Oh, it's almost six! We should _____ and rest for today.
