As our working days get longer and our lives get busier, getting enough rest isn't always easy. And though many of us can survive on just a few hours a night, that doesn't mean it's enough. Getting more sleep not only makes us feel more energetic, but also improves our mood and can reduce our chances of getting sick.

2. ....

Whether we're too busy working, can't afford to join a gym, or are just too lazy, we've all got an excuse for not exercising. However, by leaving the car at home and going to the office on foot, you'll feel better, save money on gas, and probably lose a bit of weight.

3. ....

Although meat is good for us, eating too many animal products can lead to serious health problems. Replacing your burger with vegetables a few times a week will not only help your heart, but it will probably save you quite a bit of money too.

4. ....

There are few things easier than filling a glass, yet many of us just aren't doing this. Without enough water, however, we are more likely to suffer from headaches and poor concentration. Drinking more water can also help clear your skin and improve your mood.

5. ....

As life gets busier, many of us are spending more time working and less time socializing. And while messaging is often more convenient, it's not the same as physical contact. Making time for friends doesn't just make you feel happier, it can improve your health and energy levels too.

6. ....

It may be a tasty source of energy, but it's certainly not doing our bodies any good. And while few of us can imagine life without this sweet food, reducing the amount we eat can improve our blood sugar levels, our teeth, and our moods. It can even help us lose weight.
