Diego Rivera, Muralist

Long ago, people painted on cave walls to portray their life stories. Modern-day artists also use walls to express themselves. These large wall paintings are called murals.

In the 1920s, the Mexican government started a mural programme. They hoped to use art to promote education. Artists began painting large works of art on government buildings. One of these artists was Diego Rivera.

Diego Rivera liked to paint murals because he believed that everyone, even people who didn't visit museums, should be able to enjoy art. Painting on public buildings made art available to everyone.

Rivera tried to tell the story of Mexican people in his murals. He used bright colours and painted scenes of farmers and workers.

Eventually, Diego Rivera became very famous for his murals. He even painted murals in the United States that portrayed American life. Even today, Diego Rivera is considered the greatest Mexican mural artist.
