My Dead Sea Experience

by Jeff Gibbs

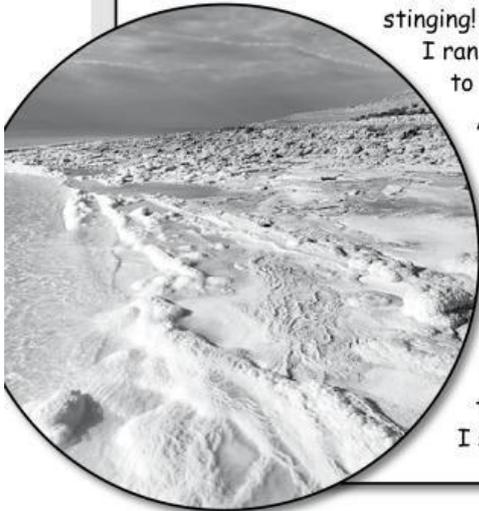

I had been to Jordan a few times and I always enjoyed myself. On my last visit, I decided to go to the Dead Sea, a place I had always wanted to visit. The Dead Sea has been attracting visitors for thousands of years. The shoreline of the Dead Sea is the lowest point on earth not covered by water, and the salt and minerals in the water are supposed to be very good for your skin and health in general.

Arriving there, I noticed that all the rocks on the beach were covered in salt. I immediately understood where the Dead Sea gets its name from. The water has 30% salt so no plants or animals can survive.

There was a sign saying 'NO DIVING' and 'SWIM ON YOUR BACK', but I thought they were warnings for people who couldn't swim. I soon realised that you don't need to be able swim in the Dead Sea. In fact, swimming isn't really possible, as floating is all you can do. But it is a very pleasant experience, and I could see why people compare it to floating in space.

It was a very hot day and lying on the water was very relaxing. However, I soon started getting hot lying on my back, as the water wasn't exactly cool. So, I decided to turn over. Big mistake! My head went under, and I took in a mouthful of water. It tasted disgusting, but that wasn't my main problem. My eyes were stinging! I was almost blind from the tears, and I ran out to the fresh water showers nearby to wash the salt out.

A group of Tunisian tourists thought it was hilarious, but it took me a while to see the funny side. They came out to make sure I was OK, and advised me to take a mud bath. I wasn't sure in the beginning, but they persuaded me it was worth it, and they were right. It felt amazing, and after the evening sun had dried the mud, I went back into the sea to wash it off, making sure I stayed on my back this time.

- What is NOT true about the Dead Sea?
 - It has been a popular place for a long time.
 - There is no place on land lower than its shoreline.
 - It didn't use to be covered with water in the past.
 - People believe its salt and minerals are good for you.
- Why didn't the writer swim in the Dead Sea?
 - because of the signs
 - because he didn't know how
 - because he found floating more pleasant
 - because there was too much salt in the water
- Why did the writer get out of the water?
 - because he got salt water in his eyes
 - because he swallowed some salt water
 - because he wanted a shower to cool down
 - because he didn't like the temperature of the water
- What did the Tunisian tourists do?
 - They laughed at the writer when he was taking a mud bath.
 - They advised the writer to take a mud bath to help his eyes.
 - They persuaded the writer to try something he didn't really want to do.
 - They advised the writer to avoid doing something.
