E Translate these dialogues into Chinese. PRESENTATIONAL

1 Q: Cousin (表哥), we've arrived at the train station. Where are you?

A: I'm almost there. Sorry, the roads are jammed. Wait for me. Don't go running around.

Q: Where should we wait for you, then?

A: When you come out of the train station, there's a shopping center next to it. Wait for me at the entrance to the shopping center.

2 Person A: What's that sound?

Person B: Sorry, it's my stomach rumbling. I'm hungry.

Person A: What would you like to eat? There are many shops selling local snacks across the street.

Person B: Do you want to have zongzi?

Person A: Since it's the Lantern Festival today, let's have yuanxiao.

1 Lisha's Diary

Today Tianming's cousin acted as our tour guide and took us to walk around the streets and see a bit of Nanjing. Tianming's father often says that Nanjing is a quiet city. Who knew it would be this lively and bustling with activity? There are foreign tourists everywhere. There are American fast food restaurants, Japanese banks, and French clothing stores in Nanjing. Tianming said that Nanjing has melded into the world, which is a good thing. But I worry that if things go on like this, there could be fewer and fewer things with Chinese characteristics. Tianming's cousin said that Nanjing has preserved many things with Chinese characteristics, for example, the Temple of Confucius. When we saw the Temple of Confucius, we all felt it was really interesting. It seems that people in Nanjing do really want to preserve the traditions of old Nanjing as much as possible.
