Elizabeth Bisland and the competition for history!

Elizabeth Bisland was a journalist for Cosmopolitan Magazine in 1889. 1 One day in November of 1889, Cosmopolitan got its chance when its publisher John Brisben Walker saw an unbelievable story in the newspaper The World. That paper wanted to send Nellie Bly on a round-the-world journey to beat Phileas Fogg from Jules Verne's Around the World in Eighty Days. What if Cosmopolitan could do it with their female writer first?

And who better than Elizabeth? A beautiful young woman, who built a career herself from fifty dollars in her pocket and who, as a literature writer, knew Jules Verne's book. 2 Bisland refused! She told her boss that she had plans, but the real reason was that she was worried that people wouldn't take her seriously as a writer if she did it. Brisben Walker didn't take no for an answer, though, and soon Elizabeth was on a train to begin her journey!

Elizabeth wrote seven articles about her adventure and, since she was also a poet, she made her writing full of beautiful descriptions of the changes in the world around her as she moved around the globe. These descriptions amazed her readers and made her articles very popular. 3 That's because Bisland never called it a 'race' and instead used words like 'journey' or 'trip'. To her, the most important thing was the voyage itself, not beating Nellie Bly.

In the end, Bisland's amazing journey took her 76 and a half days, which was a very impressive time and faster than Phileas Fogg's 80. Yet, unluckily for Elizabeth, The World's Nellie Bly beat her by four days, managing her trip in 72. 4 Despite this, Elizabeth never gave any talks, sold any products or did anything with the media. In fact, she even left the United States to concentrate on her writing.

History might remember Nellie Bly as the winner of the exciting round-the-world race, but it certainly hasn't forgotten Elizabeth Bisland. 5

- A However, things didn't start well.
- B Back then Cosmopolitan was still new and looking for ways to amaze its readers.
- C Bisland's articles were published in 1891.
- D Even so, the race between the two women amazed the world and made them both famous.
- E Bisland was never interested in making money giving talks.
- F A powerful woman who was a poet, artist, and someone who showed people the true beauty of the world.
- G Cosmopolitan is one of the world's biggest magazines.
- H They also showed an important fact about how she viewed her adventure.
