Percentage of Australian workforce in five industries between 1962 and 2012

stable	roughly	consistently	reported	stayed	decline
subsequently	timeframe	dominant	falling	regards	witnessed

The line graph illustrates the proportion of the workforce in Australia in different sectors over a 50-year period from 1962 to 2012.

Overall, the trends for construction and mining were relatively ..... while the others .....changes at different paces over the period in question. Another striking feature is that while services remained by far the most ..... industry, mining was ..... to be the least popular during the period as whole.

In detail, in 1962, more than half of the Australian workforce were employed in service industries. ....., its figure had soared to finish at .....80% by 2012, which was the highest level in the graph.

LIVEWORKSHEETS

In contrast, as .....the manufacturing industry, with the initial percentage of approximately 26%, it had witnessed a gradual .....until the end of the....., dropping to exactly 10%. Similarly, the agricultural sector mirrored this downward trend, although it declined at a much slower pace, ...steadily from just over 10% to roughly 5% in 2012.

Meanwhile, with respect to the construction, workers in this industry comprised just under one-tenth of the total workforce in the first year, after which the figure .....practically unchanged until 2002. Then it grew marginally to reach the same level as that of manufacturing in 2012. A similar pattern was observed in the mining workforce, ...hovering at around 2%.

LIVEWORKSHEETS