

Gerunds Part 2: Gerunds working as Object

Important facts about Gerunds

The “ing” forms of irregular and regular verbs can be used in the following scenarios: Continuous tenses, Gerunds as Subject, Gerunds as Object, and Gerunds with Infinitives.

First, there are different types of nouns and Gerunds are a type of noun. A noun is a name, and everything around us has a name. In the case of Gerunds, they are the name of activities. Every activity we perform has a name. For example: Eating is the name of the activity of having food no matter the time of the day. Drinking is the name of the activity of having any type of beverage such as: water, juice, sodas, etc. Talking is the name of the activity of either having oral communication with someone or saying something to someone.

Secondly, Gerunds are in object mode when they are placed after a main verb.

For example: I love eating vegetables and fruit. In this sentence, love is the main verb and eating is the Object because it comes after the main verb love. In this activity we are going to focus on Gerunds In Object Mode.
