Read the following letter, answer the questions!

Over the last 20 years, American multi-billionaire Steve Fossett has become one of the world's most famous adventurers

His list of achievements is amazing. He has flown around the world in a hot air balloon, been on round-the-world sailing trips. Swum across the Channel from England to France, driven a sports car in the Le Mans 24 hours, run a marathon, done ski races and triathlons, ridden a dogsled across Alaska ... the list goes on. As a result of his adventures, he's broken a number of world records, and 10 won several awards. Clearly, Fossett has had some incredible experiences, and at 61, should be ready for a relaxing retirement.

But he's not tired of adventure yet, and probably never will be. That's because he knows the key to happiness - something money can't buy.

According to psychologists, past success isn't enough. Even if their most fantastic dreams come true, most people are only happy for a short time, then they quickly return to 'sad' normality.
