Long Ride Even Longer?

By Selma Gonzalez

On Monday, Chien Motors, the manufacturer now producing Long Ride motorcycles, announced a delay in the introduction of the new Flash JX model. Industry competitors responded with surprise at the news. —[1]—. And Long Ride motorcycle fans went online en masse to express frustration with Chien Motors for canceling March's much-anticipated rollout.

It seems the decision to equip the Flash JX with a hybrid system, which uses both gasoline and electric power, is to blame. Chien Motors admits that the current prototype was rejected because of its excessive size and weight. This design of the power system would have required a larger motorcycle body than planned. They also had concerns over its lack of power output. —[2]—.
