

We already know the pronouns are words to identify the person we are talking about or the person who does an action. However, when we talk about people who are not the subject but an object of the sentence, we need to change the words.

Look at the following sentence:

STUDYING CHEMISTRY STRESSES HE

If we want to express that the subject of study stresses someone we can't use a regular personal pronoun. Thus, we apply the OBJECT PRONOUNS.

STUDYING CHEMISTRY STRESSES HIM

Here, we have more examples of pronouns that are objects of a verb:

- She knows me. (I)
- Maths confuses you (YOU)
- The dog kisses him. (HE)
- David admires her. (SHE)
- The teacher writes it. (IT)
- The children love us. (WE)
- Luke helps them. (THEY)

Notice that 'it' and 'you' are the same when they're subject pronouns or object pronouns.

We use them after a preposition (including after phrasal verbs). It's important to me.

- Can the children come with you?
- Look at her!
- The chocolate is for him.
- David is looking forward to it.
- Keep up with us!
- Lucy works for them.

We use them after the connector 'but' and 'except'.

- Everyone is excited about it but me.
- Everybody wants to go except him.

We use them after 'be'. (In very formal English, the subject pronoun is sometimes used here, but this is very old-fashioned and unusual.)

- Who's there? It is me!
- It is you.
- This is her.
- It was him!

With short answers, we can also use a subject pronoun + a verb. This sounds a bit more formal than the object pronoun alone.

A: Who's there? B: I am! (ME!)

A: Who ate the cake? B: He did! (HIM!)

A: I'm tired. B: I am too. (ME TOO!)
