

You have seen the following blog in an online magazine for young people.

I live in a small village and long to move into the city. I am 18 years old and have just left school. What are the good things about city life? What about the disadvantages? Would I be mad to leave my village, or would I be opening up great new opportunities?

Dear Paul,

Thanks for your email. I can see you're really struggling with this decision, so let me help you out with some insights.

Moving to the city is definitely the best choice you can make, no questions asked. First of all, you can party every night and never have to worry about getting enough sleep. Who needs rest anyway? Plus, you'll never have to see the same person twice, so you don't have to worry about making any real friends.

City life means you can spend all your money on rent and have nothing left for fun activities. It's great to experience the thrill of living paycheck to paycheck. Also, the air quality is so bad that you'll get used to coughing all the time, which is a fantastic way to build up your lung strength.

On the downside, you might miss the sound of birds and the peacefulness of the countryside, but who needs peace and quiet when you have constant noise and traffic jams? Plus, in the city, you can completely forget about nature and focus on the important things like social media and fast food.

So yes, you would be absolutely mad to stay in your village when you could be opening up great new opportunities like getting lost in a big crowd or finding out what it's like to live in a tiny, overpriced apartment.

Best of luck with your move! Please write if you need more advice!

Best regards,

Jenny
