When I was a child, I spend hours playing in the backyard without a care in the world. I climb trees, and I even build small forts out of sticks and leaves. However, I stay out after dark because my parents worried about my safety. I play video games during the week, as my parents believed they distract me from my studies. Despite these rules, I have asked for a happier childhood. I always find something fun to do, and I imagine growing up any other way.
