

WOMAN: OK. Let's have a look at the current job vacancies at Milo's. The first one is in Street. Q6

MAN: Sorry, where?

WOMAN: It's quite central, just off Cork Street.

MAN: Oh right.

WOMAN: They're looking for a breakfast

MAN: That would be OK.

WOMAN: So you're probably familiar with the kind of involved. Obviously checking that all the portions are correct, etc., and then things like checking all the for cleaning the equipment are being followed. Q7

MAN: OK. And what about the salary? In my last job I was getting £..... per hour. I was hoping to get a bit more than that.

WOMAN: Well, to begin with, you'd be getting £9.75 but that goes up to £..... after three months. Q8

MAN: That's not too bad. And I suppose it's a very early start?

WOMAN: Mmm. That's the only thing about this job. But then you have the afternoons and evenings free. So the restaurant starts serving breakfast from a.m. And you'd have to be there at 5.30 to set everything up. But you'd be finished at 12.30.

MAN: Mmm. Well, as you say, there are to that.

WOMAN: Now, you might also be interested in the job at the City Road branch. That's for a junior chef, so again a position of MAN: I might prefer that, actually.

WOMAN: Right, well obviously this role would involve supporting the sous chef and other staff. And you'd be responsible for making sure there's enough stock each week – and sorting out all the Q9

MAN: I've never done that before, but I imagine it's fairly, once you get the hang of it.

WOMAN: Yes, and you'd be working alongside more staff to begin with, so I'm sure it wouldn't be a problem. The salary's slightly higher here. It's an annual salary of £.....

MAN: Right.

WOMAN: I know that if they like you, it's likely you'll be quite quickly. So that's worth thinking about.

MAN: Yes. It does sound interesting. What are the like?

WOMAN: The usual, I think. There's a lot of evening and weekend work, but they're closed on
But you do get one Sunday off every four So would you like me to send off your ... Q10
