STUDENT'S NAME:

1- Read the text and say if the sentences are true or false.

Every Week, 1.7 million people go to the cinema in Britain. Seven out of ten people go to the cinema from time to time. Young people between the ages 7 and 14 go most often. People over 45 rarely go. In Britain, there is a system to prevent young people from unsuitable films. These are some of the categories:

- Universal: suitable for all
- Parental guidance: the film is suited for general viewing but some scenes may be unsuitable for young children
- Suitable only for people of 12 years and over.
- Suitable only for people of 15 years and over.
- Suitable only for people of 18 years and over.

Today, most British and American films are sold as videos for viewing on television at home, as well as shown in cinemas. In Britain, over 73% of homes have a video recorder and many people regularly rent films from video shops. The film industry and television often work together in other ways too. Many films are actually paid for by a television company. Four Weddings and a Funeral and Mr Bean were made by British television companies.

India makes the most films per year. In 1959, India made a record 948 films. It also has the largest cinema audiences. Every day, 15 million Indians go to the cinema. Countries such as Japan and France all make more films than the Americans, but their audiences are much smaller. There are not many foreign language films shown in British cinemas but you can see them on television from time to time. Some people find them difficult to watch because they are shown in the original language and you have to read the subtitles.

Although America makes only about 250 films each year, Hollywood still dominates the industry. You can see American films in almost every country in the world.
