Eric: Hi, Ms Harris. Here we are, talking once again.

Ms Harris: Well, I'm always 1 to help out wherever possible. Is anything 2 you?

Eric: Well, your advice last week about writing 3 was very useful, and I'm using these summaries a lot in order to prepare my final master's 4 .

Ms Harris: But you're having problems, right?

Eric: Yes, I have a few 5 to discuss. Obviously I want a good essay, and I want to achieve high 6 . But I'm not sure on the best way to start.

Ms Harris: That's an easy question. Start with a topic, but not one that I 7 suggest, but one that you want to explore. You will always write better when doing so on a topic you are 8 in, not one imposed upon you by others.

Eric: Well, I'm interested in 9 theory.

Ms Harris: Then 10 that. However, that alone is far too broad. Break it into 11 current areas of discussion and 12 , then look more carefully at one of them — say, management and 13 differences, or management and 14 , or other aspects, such as the role of salary, group 15 , or leadership.

Eric: I would say I'm interested in group cohesion—that is, how people 16 in the workplace.

Ms Harris: Well, that's a start, but you can't then just write 17 , without defining exactly what you intend to do within the area you've 18 . You'll have to think of a thesis, and this statement could be of several types.

Eric: Such as what?

Ms Harris: Oh, you could argue a point, something that you believe in; or discuss an issue, looking at its various 19 ; or critique the opinions of others, pointing out the 20 and flaws. The thesis statement will make that very clear because it will say, in simple terms, what you 21 to achieve in your essay.

Eric: I see. And then I can just begin writing, right?

Ms Harris: Wrong! [Uh?] If your essay is going to be clear, it needs to be logical and 22 , and this means you'll need an outline. This could be written as a flowchart, or spider graph — that is, a series of connected lines, but whatever shape the outline takes, there must be a sense of progress, in, more or less, a straight line, towards a goal.

Eric: And then my essay will be good?

Ms Harris: With such progression, definitely—as long as you do achieve everything that you set out to do, as specified in the beginning, okay?
