Video Games

Entertainment in the United States is big business. One entertainment industry made five billion dollars in 1981. That sum is almost twice as much as the movie industry made, and three times more than all the major professional sports made. I am talking about the video games industry.

All over the U.S, people are standing in front of electronic machines and playing games. Each game usually last about two minutes and costs twenty-five cents. But players sometimes play for hours and spend tens of dollars on the games. A fifteen-year-old, who lives in Illinois, has the record for "Defender", which is a space attack game. The record is 16 hours 34 minutes, and 15,963,100 points, all for the same 25 cents. This is an incredible record, but the machine always wins in the end.

Many adults are worried about the games. Young people sometimes miss school to play them, and they often spend a lot of money on them. The games are fun, but they often become an expensive habit. Think about this. How many 25 cents make 5 billion dollars?
