The World Food Programme

The World Food Programme, or WFP, is part of a larger organization called the United Nations. The WFP was started in 1961, and its aim is to provide food for people all over the world, who, for a number of reasons, do not have enough to eat. The WFP is managed by a group of people from 36 member states, and the organization itself employs almost 12,000 people.

Natural disasters mean that people can lose everything they own in minutes. The WFP tries to save lives and protect communities during natural disasters by providing food and helping people to rebuild their communities. A warning flag is the best way of saving lives when a natural disaster takes place, and the WFP has a very advanced system for collecting and looking at information on natural and man-made dangers. When the WFP sees that an emergency is not far off, it can order extra of anything it needs and move these products by lorry and ship, instead of by air. This saves time, money and lives.

The WFP's projects also allow people to stop worrying about their next meal and build a future for themselves and their families. The organization educates people by showing them how to plant crops such as rice, and also how to look after them. It goes even further by helping farmers connect to reliable markets where they can get good prices for their goods when they sell them.

- 1 The people who manage the WFP come mainly from European countries. _____
- 2 After a natural disaster takes place, the WFP feeds people in the area. _____
- 3 The WFP is unable to predict when a natural disaster will happen. _____
- 4 Air travel is the only type of transport used by the WFP. _____
- 5 The WFP teaches farmers how to grow crops. _____
