IV. Read the following passage and do as direct. (17-22)

Sign languages are visual languages that use hand gestures, body movements, and facial expressions to communicate. They are not universal and differ from country to country. Sign languages have their own grammar, syntax, and vocabulary, just like spoken languages. They are used by millions of people worldwide, including the deaf community and people with hearing impairments.

Sign languages are not just a mode of communication, but also an important part of the cultural identity of the deaf community. They are used to tell stories, express emotions, and convey complex ideas. Sign languages have been recognized as official languages in many countries, and efforts are being made to provide education and resources to deaf people to learn and use sign languages.

However, sign languages still face many challenges, including limited access to education and employment opportunities in some countries, as well as a lack of recognition and support from some governments and societies. Despite these challenges, sign languages continue to thrive and evolve, enriching the lives of those who use them and promoting greater inclusivity and diversity in our world.
