

The Battle of Hastings

battle invasion until includes influence after wall built stands Saxon had with foot crown by arrow William changed was as army up for which days enemy eye

The Battle of Hastings was fought for the _____ of England between _____, Duke of Normandy and the recently enthroned Harold Godwinson (Harold II).

The English _____, led by King Harold, took _____ their position on Senlac Hill near Hastings on the morning of the 14th of October 1066.

Harold's exhausted and depleted Saxon troops _____ been forced to march southwards following the bitter, bloody _____ to capture Stamford Bridge in Yorkshire only _____ earlier.

William attacked _____ cavalry as well _____ infantry; in the classic English manner, Harold's well-trained troops all fought on _____ behind their mighty shield wall.

The fighting continued _____ most of the day with the shield _____ unbroken. It is said that it was the sight of retreating Normans _____ finally lured the English away from their defensive positions as they broke ranks in pursuit of the _____.

Once their carefully organised formation _____ broken, the English were vulnerable to cavalry attack. King Harold was struck in the _____ by a chance Norman _____ and was killed, but the battle raged on _____ all of Harold's loyal bodyguard were slain.

This battle _____ the entire course of not just English, but European history. England would henceforth be ruled _____ an oppressive foreign aristocracy, which in turn would _____ the entire ecclesiastical and political institutions of Christendom.

Four years _____ the Battle of Hastings, Pope Alexander II ordered William the Conqueror to make penance for his _____. As a consequence, William commissioned an abbey to be _____ on the site of the battle, and the remains of Battle Abbey (as it would later be known) _____ proudly to this day. The site is now operated by English Heritage, and also _____ a gatehouse exhibition as well as wooden sculptures of Norman and _____ troops scattered across the landscape.