A Visit to the Museum

Loubna liked learning about Grandma's coffee pot. Loubna wanted to know more about history and culture. So Loubna and Grandma went to the museum.

'Wow!' said Loubna. They walked around the museum happily. Loubna liked the local pots and plates. The pots and plates were behind glass to keep them safe. They were very old.

Loubna opened her notebook and started drawing the pots. She loved the patterns. There were swirls and flowers, and some even had snakes and other animals on them.

After a few hours, Loubna was hungry. Loubna and Grandma went to the café. They talked about the history and art of the United Arab Emirates.

Loubna looked inside the bag. There was a clue inside. Loubna reached into the bag and touched it.

'It feels hard and it has a round shape, with a bumpy texture.'

She smelled the bag.

'Mmm... it has a yummy smell! Just like Grandma's famous cookies.'

'What do you think it is?' asked her father.

'We are visiting Grandma!' Loubna said excitedly.

'Well done! That's right!' Her father said.

Loubna's Visit to Grandma

Grandma gave Loubna a hug. Then she brought a tray of cookies, a glass of milk and... an old pot.

'Grandma! What's that old thing?'

Loubna looked closely. It was curved. The bottom was round. It had a small cap and a big spout that looked like a beak. It was beautiful but grubby. It smelled interesting.

'What is it, Grandma?' asked Loubna.

'It's my coffee pot!' said Grandma.

Loubna was surprised. Where was the plug? Where did the coffee go?

Grandma said that in the past it was shiny. It belonged to her great grandmother. It was old, but Grandma liked using it to make coffee.

'If this pot could talk, it would tell wonderful stories about our family's history.' said Grandma.
