ANIMAL PHOTOGRAPHERS

Kim

I started taking pictures of animals when I was a child. My family and I went to the zoo often, and I took photos of lions and tigers. I always waited for that perfect moment. One of my favourites was when a huge male lion opened his mouth very wide. You could see all his teeth! The photo showed what lions are – very strong, amazing animals. That makes the best photograph – when the image matches the subject.

Tania

I got the idea of photography from my sister, Teresa. She's a landscape photographer, so she takes pictures of mountains or a beautiful place in the countryside. Her photos are lovely, but I always wanted a bit more action in my work. I often go to wildlife parks around my countryside and abroad, and I like to hide behind a tree where the animals can't see me. I like taking photographs that show their daily life, when they take a drink of water, for example.

Olga

I used to play with my dad's camera when I was little. At first, he was worried that I would break it! But then he saw that I knew what I was doing. He showed me how to hold the camera and use the buttons. We would go behind our cottage in the countryside and take pictures of birds. I still do that to this day, but I go farther than my back garden. I visit every place in my county to see what birds I can photograph.

Three school friends

School friends Nick, Adam and Oliver followed very different paths. Nick studied business, and before finishing university, he got a job with a furniture company. Adam was into art and loved painting, but he never sold any of his work! After two years, he became a graphic designer. Oliver studied science and started working for a food maker after he completed his studies.

The three friends stayed in touch. At one point, Adam's company had some problems. He watched his colleagues lose their jobs one by one. Before his boss let him go, he decided to leave on his own.

Nick and Oliver saw that Adam was unhappy and wanted to help. While Oliver enjoyed his work, he didn't like his company very much. Nick liked all things about his job, but he was interested in having his own company. Nick suggested they open a restaurant together.

Adam and Oliver found the idea exciting. Adam used his skills to create a look for the restaurant. Oliver knew about food ... but not how to cook it! He hired a cook from Italy who created a pleasant menu.

Of course, opening a business takes more than ideas. Adam asked his parents for money, and they agreed if he paid them back. Nick and Oliver used money from the jobs that they kept. The restaurant finally opened, and after some difficult weeks, it started doing well. At some point, Oliver left his job to spend more time in the kitchen. Now Nick is waiting for the right moment to tell the furniture company good-bye.
