The Duke of Edinburgh's Award

In Britain, the Duke of Edinburgh's Award is very popular with young people. Every year, teenagers in Britain do charity work or travel on expeditions and win gold, silver or bronze awards. The Duke of Edinburgh is the Queen of England's husband, and he sometimes presents the awards to the winners. This year, 275,000 young people are doing the scheme because they want to win an award.

There are different ways of winning an award. Some young people are helping people in their communities. Other young people are learning to play a musical instrument or they are doing a new sport. And some young people are planning adventurous journeys. They are learning how to build a fire
