In my English class we ¹d prepared/d been preparing for final presentations for a whole month, and my group was scheduled to present on Monday at 9.00 a.m. These presentations were very important. The teacher ²had told/had been telling us they were worth half our final grade. Imagine my horror when I woke up that day at 8.45 a.m. I ³d forgotten/d been forgetting to set my alarm! I messaged my group to say I was going to be late. They ⁴d been getting/d got quite worried because we ⁵d arranged/d been arranging to meet early for a final practice of our presentation and I ⁶hadn't arrived/hadn't been arriving or ⁷hadn't called/called. I quickly got ready and ran out of the house. The pavement was wet because it ⁸had rained/had been raining all night. Suddenly, I slipped over on the path and fell heavily. Even though I ⁹d never broken/d never been breaking a bone before, I knew from the pain that it was what I ¹⁰d done/d been doing. By the time I checked my phone at the hospital later that morning, I ¹¹d received/d been receiving twelve increasingly frustrated messages from my group members. They ¹²d wondered/d been wondering what on earth ¹³had happened/had been happening to me. In the end, they ¹⁴d continued/d been continuing with the presentation as planned, but the teacher said I wouldn't get any marks unless I had a very good excuse for my absence. Even though oversleeping was the real reason I ¹⁵d missed/d been missing the presentation, my broken wrist provided a very good excuse indeed!
