

"A Weekend to Forget"

Last weekend was a disaster for Emma and her best friend, James. Both had planned to relax, but things didn't go as expected.

Emma had planned to stay home and read her new book, but her boss called and asked her to come into work on Saturday. Emma wasn't happy about it, and neither was James. He had also been looking forward to a quiet weekend, but his car broke down, and he spent all day Saturday at the mechanic's.

On Sunday, they both wanted to go for a walk in the park, but it started raining heavily in the morning. Neither of them wanted to go out in the bad weather, so they stayed home instead. Emma tried to bake a cake, but she burned it, and James tried to fix his car, but he didn't manage to get it working. Neither of them had a productive day.

By Sunday evening, both Emma and James were exhausted. "I can't believe how terrible this weekend has been," Emma said. James sighed and said, "Neither can I. I just wanted to rest, and now I feel more tired than before."

"I'm so glad this weekend is over," Emma added. "So am I," James replied. "Let's hope next weekend is better for both of us."
