An Animal Shelter

I volunteered at an animal shelter last summer. My job was to help take care of the dogs and cats. I fed them, cleaned their cages, and played with them. It was important to volunteer because the animals needed love and care. The shelter didn't have enough people to help, so I felt good about giving my time. Volunteering helps the community, and it helps animals that don't have homes.

I liked volunteering because I love animals. The dogs were very friendly, and they made me happy. I also met other people who love animals, and we became friends. Sometimes, it was hard work, but it felt good to help. Volunteering teaches you how to be kind and how to work with others. I enjoyed it because it made me feel useful and happy. I want to volunteer again in the future.
