The Northern Bank Robbery, Belfast, 2004

Just before Christmas, a gang of robbers, dressed as bank clerks, got the private houses of a few managers from the Northern Bank in Belfast. The criminals threatened to kill the families the managers gave them the money from their bank. The next day, the managers were on their way to work, their families were forced to stay with the robbers. The managers told the staff to let a group of special officials at the end of that day. The staff did everything the managers had told them to so as not to be fired. the criminals entered the bank, they took the money and freed the managers' families later on. Unfortunately, none of the robbers were caught.
