I'm concerned.
See, occasionally I will see someone comment on either my video or somebody else's video saying that they hate _____ the videos that person makes. _____. That's plural.
So, after hating _____ video, they go back and watch _____ and _____ video by that same person.
And this has me _____ worried, because nobody in their right mind after watching a video they hate would put themselves to the torture of watching even _____ videos by that same person.
So, I need you to hear me_____. If someone is holding you down, tying you up, pulling your eyelids open and forcing you to watch a video you hate, you need to call the police because that is wrong, that _____ _____ be happening to you, that is abuse.

Now, if no one is forcing you to watch something you don't want to watch, and you just _____ to click on a video, and then within seconds you realize you hate everything about it, there's this _____ thing called the pause button and you click it, and the person in the video instantly shuts up. And you _____ _____ take that a step further, you can X the video out, and then the _____ thing just disappears!
_____ is that!

And this goes for _____ social media, anything _____ posts.
I mean, yeah, I guess you could move on, unfriend them, unfollow them and block them, but why? When you can spend your time misspelling your opinions, in all caps, on a post you hate... _____ you could stop wasting your precious time on all that _____ and get a hobby!

Now, being mean is not an _____ hobby. Search any legitimate list of hobbies and you will not find being a "hate-filled angry bitter person who feels the need to put others down" on that list.
You _____.
Knitting? That's a hobby. Painting? _____ _____.
And here's the best part about hobbies. See, if you write negative comments online, what do you end up with? _____.
But if you take on baking, you end up with a pie.
A PIE!
_____ _____ _____ have nothing or a pie?

And I understand that you have a _____ to have your own opinion.
_____!
If someone posts a picture of their baby, and you think their baby is _____, that makes you a human with an opinion.
Now, if you choose to comment on that picture, stating you think that baby is really ugly, that makes you an _____ human ... with an opinion
And by the way, if you are an _____ human online, you're an _____ human in real life.
There isn't an online you and a real you, there's just _____ you.

And when you're _____ someday, do you really want people to remember you as an_____ _____ _____?
So, remember, you have the power to choose what you watch or read on the internet and when to keep your opinions to yourself.
And if someone has taken that power _____ from you, call the police.
