

TA10. U5. Reading 2

Exercise 1: Volunteering and Community

Volunteering is an essential part of community development. Many people choose to participate in volunteering activities in order to help those in need. Some people may get involved by donating money or goods, while others may offer their time and life-saving skills during emergencies. Volunteers often clean up parks, help in flooded areas, or work with the homeless. A good volunteer must be reliable and have excellent communication skills to work well with others. Time management skills are also important because volunteers must balance their duties with their personal lives. Volunteering is not just about giving; it's also about learning and gaining new experiences.
