Summary of Part X: Cover and Part XI: Boating.

Christmas Eve arrived with a chilling opportunity, and Taylor was ready. Danielle's vigilance finally bore fruit, and the perfect moment to strike presented itself. Carson, oblivious to the trap, drove to the hotel, his mistress's luggage serving as the bait. Taylor's meticulous preparations ensured there were no witnesses, no loose ends. She waited, biding her time until he arrived, and then, with swift precision, subdued him in Room 131. The scene was chaotic—a shattered glass, bloodstains, and the eerie silence of a fight lost. But Taylor remained calm, carrying out her plan with unwavering resolve.

Carson's end came with strychnine, a poison as cruel like his bad actions. Taylor watched the convulsions take over his body, every spasm showing he was guilty. After that, she cleaned the room and erase the evidences of what she did. Then, she put Carson's body on a cart to go on with her plans.

By the time Part 11 began, Taylor was already two hours into her mission. The sea, vast and unyielding, became her accomplice. She navigated the boat through the water, the salty breeze carrying her toward the final destination. Carson's body, wrapped and concealed, was discarded into the endless blue depths—justice served, in Taylor's eyes.

Returning to the hotel, she left no evidence behind. Every detail was accounted for, every trace wiped clean. She drove Carson's truck to Este's old house, abandoning it like an echo of his careless habits, and met Danielle nearby. They exchanged nothing but a sly grin and a pair of theater tickets—her alibi as flawless as her plan.

Carson's end came by strychnine, a poison as cruel as the deeds he committed. Taylor watched the convulsions take over his body, each spasm a grim testament to his guilt. With the room cleaned and every trace of her actions erased, she loaded Carson's lifeless body onto a cart, ready for the next phase of her plan.

When she returned to the hotel, Taylor made sure to leave no evidences of what happened. She took Carson's truck to Este's old house and left it there, like how Carson used to leave things. After that, Taylor met Danielle near and smiled. Danielle gave her theater tickets for her alibi to look real.
