EXERCISE 5: Read the passage about the history of fashion. Write T (True) or F (False).

The history of fashion

People have been wearing clothes for thousands of years and fashion has always existed.

There are examples of Bronze Age clothing from Denmark which show that their clothes were mainly made of woollen cloth or leather.

About 3,000 years ago, men were wearing woollen leggings, woollen cloaks or coats without arms and woollen hats. They also had accessories such as leather belts.

Moving quickly to the nineteenth century, fashion was very important to rich people. In the 1840s men used to wear very tight trousers and waistcoats. They generally had long hair and most men had moustaches.

By the end of the nineteenth century, men were wearing something that we would recognise today – the three-piece suit. It was now fashionable for men to have short hair although they still had big moustaches.

Fashion in the 1920s saw a huge change in style for women, but less obvious changes for men. By the end of the twenties, the car had become a part of a rich man's life and fashions changed to reflect this.

Fashion has been reflecting the world in which we live for millennia and has changed over that time, but probably not as fast as the last 100 years. Today, people are freer to wear almost anything they want and fashion has become a huge global industry.

1. Most bronze age clothes were made of wool. .....

2. Women used to wear leather belts three thousand years ago. .....
