Fifty years ago, Mr. Somchai was a farmer in a small village. He woke up early every morning before sunrise. He worked in the rice fields, planting and harvesting crops. His tools were simple—he used a hoe, a plow, and water buffalo to help him.

Mr. Somchai's day was very busy. After working in the fields, he fed his chickens and collected their eggs. He also grew vegetables and sold them at the local market. On weekends, he helped his neighbors fix their fences or build small huts.

Even though his job was hard, Mr. Somchai enjoyed his life. He loved spending time outdoors and working with his animals. In the evenings, he sat with his family, telling stories about the day.
