THE HAUNTED HOUSE

In a small, quiet town, there is an old house on Hill Street. People say it is haunted. Lucy and her friends do not believe the stories. One Friday night, they decide to visit the house.

When they arrive at the house, the wind blows hard, and the door opens by itself. “This house is scary,” Lucy says, but her friends laugh. They carry flashlights and begin to explore the dark rooms.
Suddenly, they hear a voice. “Who dares to enter my house?” it asks. They freeze. “Who is it?” Lucy calls, but no one answers.

The air becomes cold. A shadow appears on the wall, but there is no one there. The friends argue about what to do. “Let’s leave!” one of them says, but Lucy wants to stay. “We need to check upstairs,” she says.

They climb the old stairs, which creak with every step. Upstairs, they find a book on a small table. It is dusty, but Lucy opens it. The pages are blank. Suddenly, the words appear: "You are not allowed here!"
The friends scream and run down the stairs. The door slams shut, and they cannot open it. They hear footsteps behind them, but no one is there.

“Why do you come here?” the voice asks again. Lucy says, “We just want to see the house. We mean no harm.”

The voice answers, “If you accept my rules, you can leave.” They all nod quickly. The door opens, and they run out. As they leave, the house bursts into flames, but when they turn around, the house is whole again.

Since that night, they never return to Hill Street, and they always tell others to stay away.
