An unusual classroom
by education correspondent Jenna Ray

Many teenagers attend schools to study subjects like Geography, Science and Maths. But for an increasing number their main place of learning is at home, where their parents become their teachers.

And some families go even further and give up the family home to take their children on round-the-world trips! They feel that seeing everything for themselves is a better education than reading about it in a classroom.

One such couple are Ben and Emma Banks with teenage children Dan and Fiona. They've travelled around Europe with their car and caravan, stopping at places of interest – and Dan and Fiona take part in the planning. They both get ideas from guidebooks about places they'd like to see. But then the whole family has to agree before they set off.

Says Dan, 'It's wonderful that we're not limited to the classroom to learn things. It's helped me to really know how things work, for example, rather than just remember facts. Everywhere we go, we can learn something, like Maths – working out average plane speeds, and so on at the airport, or Biology – studying the wildlife around a river.'

Fiona agrees with her brother, but adds, 'While I've enjoyed it all, I do sometimes miss sleeping in our house, and just going into town with friends at the weekends. We still keep in touch with friends, though, so it's not too bad. And I wouldn't want to swap places with my classmates for anything!'

Hi Jake,

We're finally here on our holiday! We're at a campsite by the sea, so we can go <sup>0</sup>swimming every morning! The journey was hard, though. We nearly missed our train and my <sup>1</sup> _____ was really heavy to carry. And I lost my <sup>2</sup> _____ somewhere, so we had to buy another for me to sleep in. But the place is great, and the <sup>3</sup> _____ shows some great places nearby to visit. Now I'm sitting on the beach, covered in sun cream. It's very hot! And I'm wearing my new <sup>4</sup> _____, ready to go into the water. But first I think I'll go and have a rest inside our <sup>5</sup> _____!
