During the Trump elections, many people were amazed _____ how things turned out. Journalists tried to be careful _____ what they wrote, as it was easy to cause problems. The election halls were always crowded _____ both supporters and critics, many of whom were fed up_____ the usual politicians. Others were ready _____ a big change and felt satisfied _____Trump's promises.

Experts gave a description _____ his campaign style, explaining how he turned a failure_____ traditional politics into something successful. Journalists were always in a search _____ clues to figure out how he planned to find a solution _____ the country's problems. People tried to distinguish _____ his real policies and his catchy slogans.

Some analysts experimented _____ new ways of understanding voters, while most of the public could only glance _____the news headlines. Some voters heard _____ him from friends, while others wish they did not hear _____ him at all.

Many people decided to join in the group of his supporters, where Trump was often regarded _____ someone who could fix the economy. His team knew how to remind voters _____ the problems the country faced, and his speeches often reminded them _____how things used to be.

Trump is known _____ his way of smiling at the crowd. Trump's campaign team specialised _____ creating simple but powerful messages. Meanwhile, his opponents couldn't stop staring _____ his growing popularity, wondering how he managed it.

Finally, when it was time to vote _____ the next president, the whole world was watching. Trump's election left a lasting mark on history.

LIVEWORKSHEETS