A hot-air balloon (A9) ... of three basic parts. The large balloon is (A10) ... as the 'envelope' and is (A11) ... of nylon – the same material used to produce kites, sails and sleeping bags. There are burners under the envelope to heat the air inside and finally a basket where the passengers stand. From this position the passengers can enjoy the views of the countryside below. To understand what (A12) ... the balloon to lift into the air you must know about 'convection' or heat transfer. The scientific explanation is that by heating the air inside the envelope you increase the space the air needs. When this happens, some air gets pushed out of the envelope. With less air in the envelope, it becomes lighter and therefore able to travel up.
