Food choices differ all over the world. Every country offers its own cuisine and eating habits. In Japan, for example, they eat sushi and use chopsticks instead of forks and knives. Many Indians enjoy spicy food, and it is important for them to have family meals. People in the USA often prefer unhealthy fast food to safer home-made food. Pork is very popular in East-European countries like Ukraine. They often add it to their national soup called 'borscht'. On the other hand, pork is often not allowed by religion in the Arab region. They usually eat chicken. Today a lot of people enjoy having foreign dishes and not only just national ones. We are all different, but there is one thing that we have in common. We eat because it is necessary and pleasant at the same time.
