FUTURE FOODS

The world's population continues to grow, and it's going to mean higher food prices for us all in future. Some experts think the price of meat might double in the next ten years, which will make it too expensive for most people, so what will they eat instead? What might a typical meal look like in 20 years' time?

Insects will certainly be a part of the answer. In 2025 the European Union authorized powder made from flour beetle larvae for the food market, so insects like mealworms and locusts will become an important part of all our diets, because they can provide the same protein as meat. But don't worry, you won't have to see bugs on your plate - insects such as crickets and grasshoppers can be turned into burgers, so you won't even notice you're eating them.

Professor Post

Some people may still find the idea of eating insects too difficult, and a more popular alternative for them could be meat that's grown in a laboratory. Professor Mark Post leads a Dutch team working on lab grown meat, and thinks most people won't realize his burgers aren't made from real meat.

And what about some vegetables to go with all these burgers? Well, seaweed could become the world's biggest vegetable crop. It's the fastest growing plant on Earth, and because it can be grown in the sea we won't need to worry about finding enough land to grow it on.

HOW DO PEOPLE FEEL ABOUT EATING INSECTS?

Federica, Italy	"I don't think people are going to be happy about having to eat insects. I certainly couldn't eat anything with insects in it - it makes me feel a bit sick just to think about it!"
Mike, UK	"I'm visiting my sister in Thailand next week, and I'm definitely going to try the crispy insects on sticks she's always telling me about!"
Carlos, Colombia	"I love eating fried ants! Some of the movie theatres here sell them like popcorn!"
