The Kanneh-Mason Family in Concert

1 Harriet Smith unpacks the success of the seven gifted Kanneh-Mason siblings.

What makes the Kanneh-Mason siblings so remarkable? Is it the fact that all seven of them seem equally obsessed with music? They are, by order of age, Isata (24), Braimah (22), Sheku (21), Konya (20), Jeneba (18), Aminata (15) and Mariatu (11), and all play either piano, violin or cello or a combination. Or is it the fact that their parents Stuart and Kadiatu – neither of them musicians but both musical – didn't go down the more obvious hot-housing¹ route with specialist music schools but instead opted for state education in Nottingham at a school that truly integrated music into the curriculum? Or is it the fact that they are equally at home playing Bob Marley, Mozart or tunes from the musicals?

- 1 One of the most striking things about the family is the way that music is music. They grew up surrounded by music – reggae, rap, rock, country & western, as well as classical. That was undoubtedly the secret to their semi-final success in Britain's Got Talent² in 2015, where, after their medley of classical and electronic rock music, even the most prickly judge waxed lyrical, commenting that they were 'probably the most talented family in the world.' A fellow-judge hit the nail on the head when she summed up their performance with the observation: 'So many younger people might think this music is stuffy and you give it personality and character and fun: I think you could probably introduce it to a whole new audience of people who have never really appreciated that kind of music before.'
- 2 How right she was, and in the years since then the siblings have made their mark both individually and as a family. In 2016 cellist Sheku Kanneh-Mason was the first-ever black musician to win the coveted BBC Young Musician, while pianist sisters Isata and Jeneba reached the keyboard finals in 2014 and 2018 respectively. In 2018 Sheku reached an audience of two billion worldwide when he played at the wedding of Prince Harry and Meghan Markle. Sheku and Isata have both made best-selling recordings and all seven will shortly release a new album together.
- 3 But before we get carried away by the fairy-tale aspect of the Kanneh-Masons, let's not forget that this has come about through a mix of talent, hard work and a certain amount of sacrifice too, as their mother relates in her recently published book House of Music. She doesn't like the word 'talent' very much though. 'I think all children actually have genius ... and it's all about championing that.' She explains: 'Genius is something you really, really want to do, which is probably more important than something called "talent". It's loving something, wanting to do it, having the thirst to do it, and then channelling that hard work. It's not something you are born with, because if you do nothing about it, it goes nowhere.'

² Britain's Got Talent: a British talent competition and television show
