but I just walked past them anyways and so 2 fully armed men aimed their shotguns at me before a third one pulled me away.

So yeah I ended up taking another way home and sadly didn't get a hold of the money.

This one time I was walking how from school (I think), and while I was on my usual routine, one of those trucks that refill the ATM's with cash parked right in front of me, blocking my way. Of course, they were just trying to re-stock the ATM,

It was funny but a little bit embarrassing too. I'm glad she wasn't mad (the lady) at the moment.

I was very sleepy and I used to put my head on my grandma's shoulder to sleep until we get home, but that time I feel like someone's waking me up and I realized I fell asleep in a lady's shoulder!

When I was a kid and used to live with my grandma, we both would take a bus, sit together and go home. But that day every seat had at least one person, so we couldn't sit together

The day of the play arrived and I was going crazy for the nerves. The scene when my character was supposed to appear came in so I entered the stage. But the narrator made a mistake. They had passed her the unmodified script, in which my character did not exist.

In the end I had to improvise a lot so the plot could continue normally but I was so embarrassed that I swore that I would never participate in that kind of stuff again.

When I was 8 years old, I had to participate in the theatre for my school play in the last part of the year. I was really nervous, but there was a problem, we were too many people in the club so we had to change the script to add a new character which I was going to play. It was hard for me because I'm a very anxious person in public but I did my best learning my lines.
